

Health groups unite to condemn BAT event on social reporting in the European Parliament

Brussels Wednesday 10 January 2007

Some of Europe's leading health organisations today criticised a meeting called by British American Tobacco to sell its social reporting strategy in the European Parliament.

Speaking on behalf of the Smokefree Partnership, Fiona Godfrey said, "BAT can come to Brussels and spin a nice story on social reporting to the European Parliament and policy makers. But this story hides a catalogue of breaches of tobacco legislation, abuse of basic employment rights, environmental degradation and devastating damage to the health of BAT's consumers and its tobacco workers around the world.¹ BAT's fantasies on social reporting just don't belong in the European Parliament."

Susanne Logstrup representing the European Heart Network said, "We are deeply dismayed that BAT's meeting on Corporate Social Responsibility takes place in the European Parliament – but heartened that respected members of the Parliament will not support the event. We remain concerned by the way tobacco companies seem to be attempting to influence decision makers throughout Europe."

Luk Joossens speaking on behalf of the European Cancer Leagues added: "BAT have issued several legal challenges in the European Court of Justice and in other EU countries to the 2001 EC Tobacco Products Directive² and other pieces of EU tobacco legislation. They continue to breach laws aimed at reducing the harm caused by tobacco around the world.³ We just don't understand how the European Parliament can watch its own laws being repeatedly challenged and ignored by BAT and then give them a platform to say how socially responsible they are. It's totally illogical."

But the health organisations involved added that they expect the event to be a flop. “BAT have tried this elsewhere around the world including in France and found that stakeholders just don’t want to engage with a company with BAT’s track record”, said Emmanuelle Beguinot Director of the CNCT (Comite national Contre le Tabac) in France.
